Civic and Citizenship Education in Israel

Published 2003 • Cambridge Journal of Education, Vol. 33, No. 1, pp. 53–72

ACADEMIC CITATION (APA)

Lemish, P. (2003). Civic and citizenship education in Israel. Cambridge Journal of Education, 33(1), 53-72. https://doi.org/10.1080/0305764032000064640

ABSTRACT & RESEARCH CONTEXT

This article analyzes the structural, political, and pedagogical tensions in delivering civic and citizenship education in Israel. It examines curriculum development policies, ideological battles, and the ongoing struggle to cultivate democratic agency, tolerance, and critical inquiry within a deeply divided ethnocratic society.

KEY FINDINGS & THEORETICAL CONTRIBUTION

Key findings distinguish between formal constitutional civics and broader lifelong civic consciousness. The paper dissects foundational civic myths and demonstrates how ethnic-national hegemony can marginalize minority perspectives unless actively challenged through critical, dialogic pedagogy.

ARCHIVE LOCATION & REPOSITORY ACCESS

Author:	Dr. Peter Lemish
Publication ID:	pub-1
Document Type:	Archival Peer-Reviewed Scholarly Brief / Full Analysis
Digital Archive:	Dr. Peter Lemish Living Digital Archive (https://peter-lemish-archive.vercel.app)
NotebookLM Source:	https://notebook.google.com/notebook/b5f6877e-c233-44d3-966a-ff6ee36344fa