Developing Children's Understanding of Conflict Resolution Through Quality Television

Published 2007 • Children and Media in Times of War and Conflict, Hampton Press (pp. 215–236)

ACADEMIC CITATION (APA)

Lemish, P. (2007). Developing children’s understanding of conflict resolution through quality television. In D. Lemish, M. Götz, & B. Dervin (Eds.), Children and Media in Times of War and Conflict (pp. 215-236). Hampton Press.

ABSTRACT & RESEARCH CONTEXT

This research analyzes how high-quality children's television programming can serve as an effective instrument for peace education and constructive conflict resolution. It evaluates narrative framing techniques and strategies to help young audiences process news-induced fears.

KEY FINDINGS & THEORETICAL CONTRIBUTION

The study defines principles for constructive conflict portrayal: establishing core conflict stakes clearly, depicting all factions humanely, avoiding simplistic binary villainization, and illustrating win-win negotiation phases.

ARCHIVE LOCATION & REPOSITORY ACCESS

Author:	Dr. Peter Lemish
Publication ID:	pub-2
Document Type:	Archival Peer-Reviewed Scholarly Brief / Full Analysis
Digital Archive:	Dr. Peter Lemish Living Digital Archive (https://peter-lemish-archive.vercel.app)
NotebookLM Source:	https://notebook.google.com/notebook/b5f6877e-c233-44d3-966a-ff6ee36344fa